Level	Requested Level of Need	Examples
1	Safety and protection issue that is present and immediate and that produces a life threat to either the individual or others. Examples include violent aggression, severe self-injury, elopement without knowledge of danger, or pyromania.	Requires constant (24/7) supervision and support on-site by staff receiving specialized behavioral training. Requires periods of 1:1 support on a daily basis. Requires multiple people to intervene in high intensity situations. Requires daily behavioral data collection and analysis. May require extensive environmental rearrangements.
2	Health-related conditions that are present and immediate and that produce a life threat to the individual. Examples include tracheotomy, severe eating disorders, or pica.	Requires constant supervision/treatment on-site by trained staff. Requires regular and/or on-call professional staff and special medical equipment.
3	Safety and protection issue that is cumulative and that produces a life threat either to the individual or to others. Examples include a long history of aggression, self-injury, elopement, or other dangerous behavior.	Periodically requires constant supervision and support on-site by staff receiving specialized behavioral training. Requires daily behavioral data collection. May periodically require extensive environmental rearrangements.
4	Health-related conditions that are cumulative and that produce a life threat. The individual has a frequent need for intensive medical treatment and/or constant supervision. Examples include: frequent choking, frequent and intense seizures, severe asthma, and conditions requiring daily respiratory therapy, oxygen, suctioning, or breathing treatments.	Periodically requires constant supervision for medical supervision. May require on-call professional staff and special medical equipment.
5	Safety and protection issue that is present or cumulative but does not produce a life threat. Behaviors may not be life threatening but are severe and likely to produce injury to self or others or property destruction. There is a history of severe behaviors, but behaviors may have decreased in frequency because of successful placement of behavioral supports. Examples include aggressive sexual behavior, unpredictable aggressive behavior, pica, rumination, self-injury, and wandering away.	Requires extra staff to be on-site for prevention and intervention of behaviors. Requires collection of behavioral data including incidents of escalation that do not result in serious behavior. May require on-call professional staff and modifications to residential or day service environments. May require recurrent involvement of the criminal justice system or a need for ongoing legal support.
